Plato had two theories of art. One may be found in his dialogue The Republic, and seems to be the theory that Plato himself believed. According to this theory, since art imitates physical things, which in turn imitate the Forms, art is always a copy of a copy, and leads us even further from truth and toward illusion.

The word is Greek and means " imitation " (though in the sense of " re-presentation " rather than of " copying "). Plato and Aristotle spoke of mimesis as the re-presentation of nature. According to Plato, all artistic creation is a form of imitation: that which really exists (in the " world of ideas ") is a type created by God; the concrete things man perceives in his existence are shadowy representations of this ideal type.
